About Koh Lanta

Lush & Beautiful Koh Lanta

One of Thailand's lesser developed islands, Koh Lanta is a little more difficult to reach than other Thailand holiday islands, but is well worth the small extra effort in getting there.

A lush rainforest interior and white sand beaches are the key features of Koh Lanta, along with the absence of much nightlife and large resorts.

Koh Lanta is ideal for couples looking for a quieter escape and we highly recommend Layana Resort as a wonderful boutique Thailand beach resort. Koh Lanta can easily be combined with nearby Phuket or Krabi.

Koh Lanta actually consists of two islands - Koh Lanta Yai (large Lanta Island) and Koh Lanta Noi (small Lanta Island).

Since 2015 the two islands have been connected by a bridge. The most popular way to reach the two best boutique hotels on Koh Lanta however is by resort speedboat which is around a 45-minute journey from the mainland.

Apart from Layana and the Pimalai Resort, Koh Lanta doesn't offer very much in the way of quality accommodation and at present we don't recommend looking much further than these two great resorts.

Year-round, a variety of activities are on offer on Koh Lanta including peaceful kayaking among the mangroves, bird watching, mountain biking, visiting the National Park, and long-tail boat trips to Koh Talabeng and Koh Bubu east of Koh Lanta.

Koh Lanta offers a few beach areas where there are local places to eat out, ranging from street food to far more lugubrious dining venues.

Koh Lanta is ideal for those looking for a laid back natural beach holiday destination in Thailand.

The Southern end of Koh Lanta Yai (large Lanta Island) is home to part of a lush national park, the Mu Koh Lanta National Park.

Caves and waterfalls are easily accessible here for those looking for a great experience of nature.

Diving is popular from Koh Lanta but bear in mind that during the low season (May to October), most of the regular dive operators are closed during this time and travel by small boat is not always possible.

Excursion by boat from Layana into the National Marine Park.
